

Gender & Popular Culture 1650-1750

University of Michigan, Ann Arbor

October 21-22, 2005

The interplay between high and low cultural forms and the flux and flow of still often porous gender positions have been among the most energetically researched and richly theorized features of early modern culture in recent years. This conference will bring together established historians and literary scholars to explore the intersections of gender and popular culture over a hundred-year period that was pivotal in the emergence of modern understandings of these two conceptual categories.

For more information, please visit

<http://www.umich.edu/~gpcconf>

or email gpcconf@umich.edu

Speakers to include:

Paula Backscheider, Auburn University
Pamela Brown, University of Connecticut
Bernard Capp, University of Warwick
Frances Dolan, UC Davis
Anthony Fletcher, University of London
Paula McDowell, Rutgers University
Mary Beth Norton, Cornell University
Ruth Perry, MIT
John Richetti, University of Pennsylvania
Robert Shoemaker, University of Sheffield
William Warner, UC Santa Barbara
Rachel Weil, Cornell University

